Dear Dr. Wong:

Thank you for your great presentation on the subject: "After the Wall Street Meltdown, What Strategies Make Sense?" to our organization in Mesa, Arizona, on February 13, 2010. I have polled some of our members and 100% of my feedback has been very positive.

I initially invited you to address our group because I was impressed with your qualifications to speak on the subject of money, finance, and investing. Your knowledge and experience were evident as I watched our entire audience become captivated by your message. Your take on Wall Street, Main Street, greed, and corruption struck a familiar chord with our members and guests. Your fresh approach to personal investing based on your research was well received. I took note of the significant number of attendees who signed up for your e-mail list, and it sounds like there was some genuine interest in your seminars.

Harold, on behalf of our chapter, I want to thank you for making our February chapter meeting a success. Your presentation left us wishing we had allotted you more time to speak, and it appears that there is much interest in having you back to speak on another topic.

Yours truly,

W. William McElvain
